

What's a RAAM clinic?

Rapid access addiction medicine (RAAM) clinics are drop-in clinics for people looking for help with their substance use. The people working at these clinics know how difficult it is to ask for help. You don't need an appointment to attend this clinic – just show up during clinic hours with your health card.

Your history

The clinic team will begin by asking you about your history of substance use: when and how you started using, how much and how frequently you use, and so on. The point of these questions is not to make you feel guilty or defensive, but to get a complete picture of you in order to determine how to help you. Try to remember the clinic team is not there to judge you, and will be most able to treat you if you're completely open.

Your diagnosis

Based on your history, the RAAM clinic team will provide you with a diagnosis. If you sometimes use substances excessively or problematically but are often able to use moderately, do not suffer serious social harms from using, and do not go through withdrawal when you stop using, the team may determine that your substance use is risky.

On the other hand, if you avoid your responsibilities due to substance use, have trouble using moderately, continue to use even when you know it's a bad idea, and go through withdrawal when you stop using, the team may diagnose you with an substance use disorder. Both of these conditions are treatable.

Advice

Many people who have to go to the hospital for a substance-related problem have gotten injured as a result of using too much. In these cases, the RAAM clinic team will provide you with advice on how to make choices that will minimize the risks of intoxication, such as tips on how to pace your use and situations to avoid.

Counselling

The RAAM clinic team may refer you to counselling as part of your treatment. Counselling programs can include education on substances and healthy lifestyle choice, group and individual therapy sessions, help with developing coping skills, cognitive behavioural therapy, and peer support groups. The team will work with you to determine what form of counselling would be most helpful for you.

Medication

Addiction to some substances, such as alcohol or opioids, can be treated with a medication that will help to lessen cravings, as well as the withdrawal symptoms that may accompany your early days of sobriety. Medication usually makes other types of treatment much more effective and reduces the risk of relapse. These medications are safe, effective, and non-addictive. The team will discuss your options with you.

Bring support

If you're feeling anxious or hesitant about going to the RAAM clinic, consider bringing a supportive person with you. Changing your substance use can be very difficult, and having someone with you while you speak to the team may make you feel less overwhelmed and less alone.

Problematic Substance Use: Your options for treatment

Problematic substance use

Substance use is very common among Canadians. Most of us use at least one substance, such as alcohol, pot, or cocaine, and it can be an important part of social life. But when your substance use leads to a hospital visit, it's a sign that it is causing problems in your life.

It can be very difficult to accept that your substance use is problematic, and it's normal to feel ashamed, frightened, or angry. But the good news is that medical treatment for problematic substance use is safe and effective. This pamphlet contains information about the treatment options you'll be offered at the rapid access addiction medicine (RAAM) clinic to help you manage your substance use.
